Ninety Years of Canada's National Parks Motor Vehicle Licences, 1923 to 2013

Introduction

Banff National Park, Canada's first National Park, was created in 1885 before the introduction of automobiles but cars soon appeared on the scene. Since 1923, Canada's National Parks have used documents and objects to indicate payment of fees for the use of a motor vehicle in the parks. These items have variously been called a "national parks pass", "parks automobile licence", "national parks motor vehicle stamp", "vehicle permit" and other names. All of these items are revenue items but only some of them might be considered "revenue stamps". Regardless, the fees are one of the sources of revenue that assist the Canadian Parks Service (also called "Parks Canada") in its conservation and sustainable use mission. The designs of these licences have included wildlife — in particular buffalo, elk, moose and beaver — in many of the past 90 years; images of particular parks; and simple text.

There is very little literature published about Canada's National Parks Motor Vehicle Licences. One exception is a series of philatelic articles by Richardson (1968) alerting stamp collectors to the adhesive window decals that served as a form of federal revenue stamp in the 1960s. An initial listing of these licences with a few illustrations is also included in my book The Hunting, Fishing and Conservation Stamps of Canada (Rubec 2011). However, I felt it would be interesting to document and create a larger digital image collection representing more of this material.

National Park, Nova Scotia around 1940.*

Six basic styles of Canadian National Parks licences are known to me, as discussed below. Metal plate toppers and radiator badges ceased to be manufactured in 1940 with the introduction of metal rationing and recycling during the war years. The styles include:

- Paper or Card Licences: Seen in 1923 (Section A) and from 1941 into the 1990s (Section D).
- Metal Licence Plate Toppers made of brass, copper or aluminum from 1924 or 1925 to 1940. They were attached to the front licence plate. They could also be attached to the front radiator of the vehicle. These depict a left-facing buffalo (Section B).
- Metal Radiator Badges may also have served as a national parks licence. They were attached to the front of the radiator on a vehicle. Badges seen include a 1938 National Parks example (Section C) that is circular showing a beaver facing right (made of copper, about 13 cm tall). Metal National Parks Chauffeur badges and pins are also known from 1921 to 1958 (none are shown here; see Miles 2013). Also seen are 1933 to 1935 badges from Saskatchewan Provincial Parks that feature a left-facing beaver (made of aluminum) and a moose (Section F).
- Self-adhesive Decals on removable backings from 1941 to 1994 to be attached to the inside surface of an automobile front windshield (Section D).
- Rearview Mirror Shields made of heavy plastic from 1995 to 2013 to be hung from the rearview mirror on the inside of the front window of an automobile (Section E).
- Paper Receipts generated by various methods (Section D).

Tables A to E outline five groups of these licences during the 1923 to 2013 period. It is not known if examples exist prior to 1923. The tables include items from the following years: 1923, 1925–1940, 1942, 1946, 1948–1954, 1956, 1958–1960, 1962–1976, 1978–1996, 1998–2002, and 2004–2013. I have not yet seen any national park licences for the 12 years not in this list. These groupings may need to be adjusted when more material is available. Seventy-eight years are now represented in this digital image collection covering the 90 years from 1923 to 2013. Some years have examples of more than one style. The five groups of licences are:

- Table A: Early paper documents 1923;
- Table B: Metal licence plate toppers 1924 to 1940 showing bison;
- Table C: Metal radiator badges 1924 to 1940 showing beaver;

“A Few Other Items” are also given in Table F, recording things that are similar to, but are not national parks licences.
